

North Korea’s show of force falls short after failed missile launch

The attempted launch of a missile — which blew up almost immediately, the U.S. military said — followed a dizzying display of North Korea’s weaponry during a military parade honoring the birth of the state’s founder. But despite the failed launch, the arsenal illustrated Kim Jong Un’s resolve to develop a missile capable of reaching the United States.

Thousands march in U.S. to urge Trump to release his taxes

Timed to coincide with the traditional April 15 deadline for filing taxes, more than 100 protests were expected nationwide. In the District, demonstrators portrayed the president as a greedy politician who is not open about his financial dealings.

In Syria, the buses were loaded with hundreds hoping to flee violence. Then they became the targets.

More than 100 were killed when a car bomb devastated a convoy of buses evacuating residents from a besieged Syrian town. They were part of the first wave of negotiated transfers between rebel- and government-held towns. No one claimed immediate responsibility for the attack, which could affect a deal determining the future of 30,000 Syrians in four towns.

President says he can’t be sued for violence at his rallies because he won the election

Trump denied instigating a riot at a Louisville, Ky., campaign rally last year — but the president’s co-defendant agreed with the plaintiffs’ claim that Trump’s speech “was calculated to incite violence.”

Pulitzer Prize-winning reporting: Uncovering Trump

In February 2016, presidential candidate Donald Trump promised $6 million in donations, including $1 million from his own pocket, to charities along his campaign trail. But by the time he won the New Hampshire primary, he had stopped giving away money and had donated far less than his pledged amount. Post reporter David A. Fahrenthold went in search of the missing money and found a bigger story than he ever expected.
