EPA, Labor Dept. are targeted by industry leaders after Trump solicits policy advice

The president invited American manufacturers to recommend ways to cut regulations and make it easier to get their projects approved. Industry leaders responded with suggestions to remove more than 150 regulations and painted the clearest picture yet of the dramatic steps Trump officials are likely to take in overhauling federal policies.

Turkey’s Erdogan claims victory in vote to expand his powers, but results are contested

Unofficial tallies showed 51 percent of voters approved giving President Recep Tayyip Erdogan vast new authority as the unrivaled head of state. But the narrow margin of victory reflected Turkey’s deepening polarization, and opposition parties claimed that up to 2.5 million ballots were invalid.

As tensions with North Korea flare, Trump spends a quiet weekend at Mar-a-Lago

The president was uncharacteristically quiet after North Korea’s latest failed missile launch, leaving it to his team of deputies, as well as Vice President Pence to articulate the administration’s policy toward the totalitarian regime.

In Iowa, the meaning of a life, a death and another cup of coffee

As Rep. Steve King stirs controversy, those in his district like the regulars at the Quik Mart in Kiron — population 229 — faced a plain truth when they lost one of their own: The white population is shrinking and towns like theirs are vanishing.

Two House Republicans face anger from their own voters over health-care debacle

Fewer than 100 days after the GOP assumed complete control of Washington, their struggles have stoked widespread distrust inside the party. The friction is evident at town hall meetings across the country including those held by Ted Yoho, a far-right conservative from Florida, and Mike Coffman, a centrist from Colorado, who had to defend their decisions at home.

Perspective

Great local reporting stands between you and wrongdoing. And it needs saving.

A small West Virginia paper’s powerful work on opioids won a Pulitzer Prize for investigative reporting, but shrinking newsroom staffs nationwide mean there are increasingly fewer reporters in the vital watchdog role.

Pulitzer Prize-winning reporting: Uncovering Trump

In February 2016, presidential candidate Donald Trump promised $6 million in donations, including $1 million from his own pocket, to charities along his campaign trail. But by the time he won the New Hampshire primary, he had stopped giving away money and had donated far less than his pledged amount. Post reporter David A. Fahrenthold went in search of the missing money and found a bigger story than he ever expected.
