Trump's Appointees Raise Potential Ethics Conflicts

By ERIC LIPTON, BEN PROTETZ and ANDREW W. LEHRER

- President Trump is populating the White House and federal agencies with former lobbyists, lawyers and consultants.

- The appointments may have already led to ethics violations in at least two cases.

North Korean Show of Strength Fizzles as Missile Launch Fails

By CHOI SANG-HUN, DAVID E. SANGER and WILLIAM J. BROAD

The timing of a failed ballistic missile launch was an embarrassment for Kim Jong-un, because it appeared to have been intended to coincide with the approach of a fleet of American warships.

Federal Judge Blocks Arkansas Executions

By ALAN BLINDER

A federal judge halted Arkansas's plans for an extraordinary series of executions set to begin on Monday. A state judge's ruling had already put the schedule in doubt.

As Vote Nears, Turkey's Grip in Germany Haunts Both

By ALISON SMALE

German officials believe that President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, whose power could be expanded by a vote on Sunday, is using an arrangement between the countries to spy on opponents.

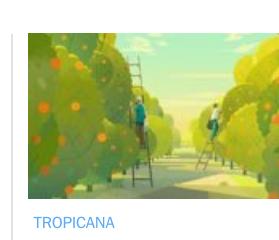

Justice Seems Out of Reach as Atrocities Mount in Syria

By ANNE BARNARD, BEN HUBBARD and IAN FISHER

A mountain of evidence has been compiled against President Bashar al-Assad and other Syrian officials for war crimes from torture to summary killings. But there is no clear path to justice.
